« EUROPEAN INTEGRATION BETWEEN TRADE AND NON TRADE: SELECTED ISSUES »

*Par Juanjuan SUN,
Doctorante - Programme Lascaux.*

On April 16, three of our PhD students, Marlen León Guzmán, Lise Rihouey and Sun Juanjuan have taken part in a Workshop for Young Researchers mainly on the European integration between trade and non trade which was organized by the Maastricht University in the Netherlands.

During the workshop, the young researches from different universities in the EU gave their paper presentations or poster presentations on their research subjects among which the food trade was a hot spot for the discussion, including the issues on the role of science, regulatory measures and genetically modified food.

Since our program, Lascaux, is a specialized project on the food law, in this case, each of our PhD students have introduced their research on the regulation on novel food, the role of science in the food policies and the food safety regulation respectively.

With this communication, not only our PhD students have the chance to improve their researches, but also our program has attracted the interests of the research in this filed which can lay a great opportunity for further research.
